Business Plan Questionnaire

A business plan is YOUR story of what you want to do and how you will do it. What you put into it is highly individual and no two plans will look alike – even for the same kind of business in the same town. On the other hand, bankers, investors and other who see your plan will be looking for certain things and you need to provide them in a format they understand.

In addition, the length of the plan will vary and for all sorts of reasons. Some people are more wordy and detailed. Some ideas are more complicated and harder to understand. There will be more information for an established business – many decisions have already been made and there will be some history – than for a start-up. If you have somewhere between 6 to 15 pages PLUS financials and possibly other appendices you are probably okay.

Business plans can take many formats, but the following questionnaire follows a standard outline and will often cover everything you need. On the other hand, it attempts to be a “one-size-fit-all” plan; parts may be less appropriate for your needs.

Executive Summary

This is actually the last part written and is usually a paragraph or so of the main points. It might read something like this:

The XYZ Company founded as a sole proprietorship in 1999 in QQQQQ, South Carolina manufactures and sells widgets. The owner, John Doe, seeks to raise $00000 in order to ABCD and will do so by a personal investment of $00 and a loan of $0000. With this money the following will be purchased: blah, blah, blah. As shown by the financials, this will increase sales by MM% and the company’s financial statements show that the profit margin is sufficient to pay back the loan.

Overview of the Business Model

This may be optional for an existing business, but it’s a good idea to address anyway. For a new business this is the section where you show why this is a good idea, a good business in which to invest. Question 1 below is really a series of questions to get you to think of this and need not all be answered. On the other hand, the space below may not be nearly enough to tell everything.

1. Why do you think this product/service is needed? How is it different than what is already out there? Are you filling some sort of gap in the market? What is it that you are trying to do? What products/services are you planning to offer? Why are you needed?
Marketing Plan

The first part of the marketing plan is examining the environment in which the business exists or will exist. First you want to know what is going on in the industry as a whole as well as trends in the target market (your intended customers) and the existing competition. This will help establish if this is a good industry to be in – who wants to make phonographs anymore? Later we get into specifics about your firm.

1. Is the industry growing, shrinking or about the same? ________________________________

2. What challenges/issues is the industry facing? (economy, changes in technology, issues specific to the industry, etc.) ____________________________________________________________
   ________________________________________________________________________
   ________________________________________________________________________

3. Briefly, what has been the industry history and where is it headed? _________________
   ________________________________________________________________________
   ________________________________________________________________________

4. Who are the customers? Be as specific as you can about demographics (age, race, sex, etc.) geography (one town, a region, state or country, worldwide), and the reasons they have for buying your product/service. ______________________________________________________
   ________________________________________________________________________
   ________________________________________________________________________

5. What motivates your customers to buy the product/service you offer? ______________
   ________________________________________________________________________
   ________________________________________________________________________

6. Who are your competitors? What are their strengths or weaknesses? First of all, start with direct competition – Coke versus Pepsi – but also consider more distant competition – Coke versus other sodas, Coke versus non-soda drinks.) Anything the customer is likely to do instead of buying your product or service including, sometimes, doing-it-themselves. (Space is not left for this as it is likely to be lengthy.)
7. What is your product/service specifically? Include packaging if applicable. What makes it different than competition (if there is a difference)?
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________

8. How will you price it? How does this compare to competition? ______________
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________

9. How will you get this product/service to the customer? (This could be location of your business or what stores will carry the product or if you will mail it, etc., etc.) Does this offer advantages your competition doesn’t offer? ________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________

10. One of the most important things is how you will let the customer know where to get your product. This includes advertising, signage, sales and other promotional techniques and public relations.
   a. Will you be placing ads? If so, where? At what cost? ________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________

   b. Will you design your own ads or will you have someone do this for you? If so, what will this cost? ________________________________

   c. Will you run sales, offer two-for-one or other deals, frequent buyer discounts or any other incentives? Describe these events including likely costs and frequency.
_____________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________
d. Will you have any public relations sort of events such as a grand opening, participating in farmers’ or community markets, trade shows or other events? Again, describe the event including probably costs and frequency.

______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________

e. Will you have a Website and/or use social media (Facebook, etc.)? If so, how, and what are the probable costs associated with this?

______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________
______________________________________________________________________

f. Please list below any other ways you intend to get your message out to your potential customers and the costs associated with them.

Lastly, a business plan normally has several appendices. While these are not required, it provides back-up information that helps a bank or other lender make an intelligent decision about your firm.
Appendices may be just a few pages or a hundred or more and frequently are longer than the plan itself. Below is a partial list of items that could be included:

1. Resumes or bios of all key personnel. For key personnel yet to be hired, a list of qualifications sought could be included.
2. Personal financial statements for the owners. (Will be required for new businesses.)
3. Credit reports on the business
5. Copies of any intellectual properties rights (e.g., patents)
6. Copies of any agreements having bearing on the business plan (or summaries)
   a. Suppliers
   b. Customers/distributors
   c. Employees
   d. Leases
7. Advertising or other marketing work – actual or mock-ups
8. Market studies – summaries of the results, copies of questionnaires
9. Summaries of secondary market studies
10. Industry studies or information supporting industry trends.
11. Reference letters, recommendations or endorsements
12. Trade journal or other professional articles having bearing to the business
13. Trade journal or other professional articles references pertinent to target market trends, wants.
14. Photos or sketches of the building, property, equipment, products
15. Map showing the location of the firm (and that of competition for retail)
16. Any other document that would provide back-up for questions likely to be asked.
